

Identification of citrus pests

Sean Moore and Tammy Marsberg
Citrus Research International (CRI)

From time to time, growers, consultants, agchem industry representatives and other technical personnel in the industry encounter pests they wish to have identified. Particularly larvae in citrus fruit may be difficult to identify. CRI is embarking on a research project to identify and catalogue all such findings. Consequently, please contact CRI with regard to identification of such samples. CRI is then also in a position to immediately assess the relevance of a sample in terms of any further research, extension support or official notifications required.

Please contact Dr Tammy Marsberg (tammy@cri.co.za) if you have any pests that require identification, particularly insect larvae. We will respond to indicate if there is any cost or not and you will be furnished with an information form to provide the necessary details on the sample and with instructions on preservation and shipping of the sample. All information will be handled as confidential and in compliance with any relevant regulations.

For any further queries contact Dr Tammy Marsberg (tammy@cri.co.za) or Dr Sean Moore (seanmoore@cri.co.za).
